Heather Huntrods

Loan Officer

Heather has been with River Valley Credit Union for just over one year as a Loan Officer at our Nevada location. She likes that her job allows her to get to know the members on a more personal level and she enjoys challenging herself to help them find the correct type of loan to fit their needs and budget. Outside of work, Heather loves spending her time with her 18-month-old son, Carson, and her family. She enjoys camping, watching football, grilling, and spending time outside at the family farm.

SERVICE AND EXPERIENCE

Important Auto Warranty Facts

It's always a good idea to know what your warranty covers and how long it lasts. But you certainly want to find out before you pay someone who's trying to sell you a new one.

You don't have to use the dealer for repairs or maintenance to keep your warranty in effect. In fact, it's illegal for a dealer to deny your warranty coverage simply because you had routine maintenance or repairs done by someone else. That said, the dealer or manufacturer can make you use select repair facilities if the work is done for free under the warranty.

- Using aftermarket or recycled parts won't void your warranty. But the manufacturer or dealer can make you use certain parts if they're free of charge under the warranty. An aftermarket part is a part made by a company other than your car's manufacturer.
- A recycled part is a part that was made for, and installed in, a new car by the manufacturer or the original equipment manufacturer, but later removed and made available for resale or reuse.

If someone installs an aftermarket or recycled part that's defective or wasn't properly installed, it could damage another part that is covered under the warranty. If that happens, the manufacturer or dealer can deny coverage for that part and charge you for repairs. But, before they can deny warranty coverage, the manufacturer or dealer must first prove the aftermarket or recycled part caused the needed repairs.
